

Book Party

for Jack Ross, author of

Rabbi Outcast: Elmer Berger and American Jewish Anti-Zionism

(Potomac Books, Dulles, Virginia, 2011)

- * All are welcome
- * There will be plenty of time for questions and comments
- * Admission is free (donations welcome)
- * Light refreshments will be served

Thursday, January 26, 2012

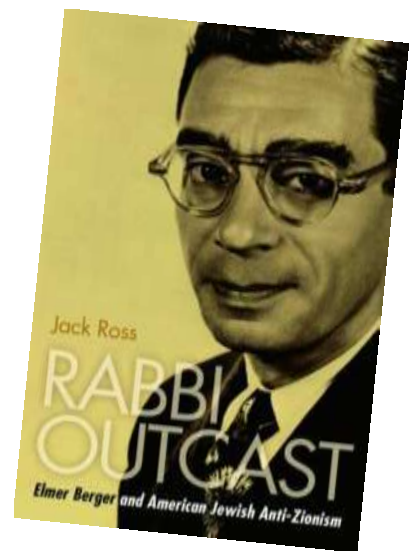

7:30 p.m.

Brooklyn Society for Ethical Culture

53 Prospect Park West

(Between 1st and 2nd streets. Take 2, 3 trains or 41 bus to Grand Army Plaza, or 69, 67 bus to 7th Ave. and 1st Street.)

Sponsored by: Brooklyn For Peace and the BFP Israel-Palestine Committee reading group. Join us is.pales@brooklynpeace.org

Praise for Rabbi Outcast:

"An important book for anyone interested in understanding the complex history of how American Jews have related to the State of Israel. Jack Ross not only tells a fascinating story about the life and times of Rabbi Elmer Berger, a deeply committed anti-Zionist, but he also makes it clear that Zionism is not the religion of all American Jews and certainly was not in the decades before Israel was created."

-- John J. Mearsheimer, University of Chicago, coauthor of The Israel Lobby and US Foreign Policy.

"A seminal book, nothing less than the rediscovery of American Jewry's dissenting tradition... a nuanced and readable portrait of people and ideas undeservedly erased from American Jewish history."

-- Murray Polner, author of Rabbi: The American Experience, and coeditor of Shalom: The Jewish Peace Letter.

Jack Ross is a freelance writer based in Brooklyn. His work has appeared widely, including Taki's Magazine, Washington Report for Middle East Affairs, The American Conservative, History News Network, and the blog Mondoweiss.net. He is a member of the Kolot Chayeinu Synagogue.